Excerpt: . . . the supply system, but the power factor can be brought within a few per cent of unity so that the effect upon the system may be readily neutralized. Its peculiar electrical characteristics impose limitations upon its general use for power-station work, but when employed in conjunction with other synchronous apparatus, such as ordinary alternators, synchronous motors and rotary converters, it becomes peculiarly suitable for extension to a power system in which the limit of generator capacity has already been reached. With the apparatus mentioned, particularly with synchronous motors and rotary converters, a sufficient leading current may be impressed upon the system by over-exciting the fields of these machines to neutralize entirely the effects of the magnetizing currents required by the induction-motor generator, so that, in general, if existing apparatus is ample to care for existing inductive loads with reasonable margin, the induction generator can...
