Excerpt: . . . swooping from the pole, And far above his utmost reach The crested billows roll. O, wild and frantic energy, No succour for thee there I O, bitter, bitter agony That yields to blank despair I LOST OVERBOARD. O, fierce tumultuous sea of thoughts, Love, sorrow, fear, and doubt I That heave and surge and boil within, Like those wild waves without. They say that in that awful hour Before approaching death, When drowning wretches toss their arms And catch convulsive breath, --That all the pictured past appears Before their swimming eyes, All hopes and loves and joys and fears, In clear and living guise: And white-robed figures, all serene, That beckon back to life; And drifting shapes of darker mien That mock their fruitless strife. Tis souls unfetterd energy That crowds into an hour Whole ages of clear imagery, --Such is its god-like power....
